

INTERESTING FINDS

This Northern Parula was spotted in Westchester County. These small wood-warblers are listed as vulnerable in New York by NatureServe and spotted in the area during migration.

Photo by David Michael

This piping plover was observed along the Fairfield County coast. Piping plovers are listed as near threatened by the IUCN and are a state threatened species in Connecticut.

Photo by Lisa Jaronik

This observation reflects what the CNC is all about. Invasive mute swans spotted on a massive nest under powerlines behind a concrete facility—proving wildlife can be found in unexpected places.

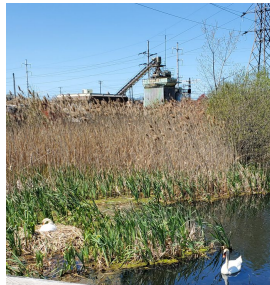

Photo by Lauren Magliola

Tiger Trout are a hybrid between Brown Trout and Brook Trout. These fish are rare finds due to being a sterile, intergeneric hybrid species.

Photo by David Cervero

The Eastern Hognose Snake is a state-designated species of concern in New York. Their main threat is habitat loss.

Photo by Marie Viljoen

2022 OVERALL RESULTS

*445 cities participated

FAIRFIELD & WESTCHESTER COUNTY RESULTS

COMPARED TO SIMILAR SIZED CITIES

(75 cities 2,000-4,999 km²)

COMPARED TO SIMILAR POPULATION SIZE

(71 cities 1,000,000-2,499,999 people)

